What if something happens to me?

You know that when illness strikes, finances often suffer. You've always considered yourself to be a strong person and nothing will really happen to you that you can't handle. You always come up with that inner strength to handle everything; to continue life despite devastation of an illness or death of a spouse.

But you also have always considered yourself to be a realistic person. You've seen friends temporarily incapacitated and relatives managing legal proceedings that go awry. Things can get away from people before they realize what's happened. You want to avoid things like this happening to you.

You realize that you will need help looking after your financial affairs when you become unable to, but you wonder who to turn to; who will have the needed expertise and be trustworthy.

We can allay these concerns. We recommend that you meet with one of us in the Wealth Management Group. We can come up with recommendations and plans. You can continue handling your own financial affairs until an event occurs and you need assistance. It's a win-win.
